About the Bloomington Drosophila Stock Center

The BDSC is a not-for-profit scientific research resource that collects, maintains, and distributes genetic stocks of the insect Drosophila melanogaster to qualified research and teaching institutions. Your fees represent approximately half of the cost of our services. Grant support from the National Science Foundation (U.S.) and the National Institutes of Health (U.S.) subsidize your fees. Additional information is available from our web site flystocks.bio.indiana.edu. See /Business/Fees/fees-2008.htm for the 2008 fee structure used to determine your fees and /Business/account.htm for other accounts-related information.

We are not the DGRC

Please note that the Bloomington Drosophila Stock Center (BDSC) and the Drosophila Genomics Resource Center (DGRC) are not the same organization. We are both in the Department of Biology at Indiana University and therefore have similar addresses and the same TIN, but we are separate entities. Please do not direct payments for the BDSC to the DGRC or combine BDSC and DGRC payments.
